

THEORETICAL METHODOLOGICAL REFLECTION: ZOOMING IN AND OUT BETWEEN DAILY LIFE AND TOURISM

Rossana A. Campodónico Pérez
Luis Francisco Chalar Bertolotti
Universidad de la República
Salto, Uruguay

Beyond the necessity in the continuity of works that deepen in the study of tourism, it is also imperative and urgent the accomplishment of integrating works, for its better understanding and transmission. Based on the above, the present article of theoretical methodological reflection addresses the trilogy "daily life (VC), tourism and mobility" since between them there is a close and complex relationship, whose understanding demands constant, renewed and integrating views. For this reason it is pertinent to contemplate a series of dimensions that, being common to them, contribute to characterize and elaborate a way of visualizing their interaction. This conduces to the possibilities that the TEMA Analysis Field presents for this purpose, by containing a set of variables that are considered shared among the concepts handled. It also proceeds to build a graphic support that contains them and allows reflection on the links, especially addressing the distance / approach between VC / Tourism within the framework of mobility in a broad sense. An analysis that tries to cover the complex demands the crossing of variables that in themselves and in their interrelations reflect and accommodate this complexity.

KEY WORDS: Tourism, daily life, mobility, dimensions, distance / approach.